MCX Gold (152,443): Selling resumes.

Gold slipped as rising oil prices fueled inflation concerns and strengthened expectations of further Fed rate hikes, pressuring the non-yielding metal.

MCX Gold resumed its decline after a brief one-day pause, failing to attract follow-through buying despite the formation of a bullish Hammer candlestick. The metal continues to trade near its first major support zone, while the overall bias remains weak with momentum indicators tilting negative.

For today's session, the outlook remains negative with immediate support placed in the 151,000–149,550 zone, while resistance is seen near 155,450. The current outlook will require a review only if the price sustains above 155,700, whereas further weakness below support may trigger fresh selling pressure.

MCX Silver (238,528): Sustain weakness below major support to invite fresh selling.

Silver slipped as higher oil prices stoked inflation fears and rate-hike expectations

MCX Silver continues to trade with a weak bias following a negative close in the previous session, where the formation of a bearish candlestick reinforced the prevailing selling pressure. The broader trend remains neutral, but with daily momentum staying weak, the instrument is currently testing its first major support zone, and any sustained weakness from current levels could attract further selling interest.

For today's session, the outlook is expected to remain weak, with resistance seen at 248,920–251,000 and immediate support at 229,780. This outlook will require a review if the price sustains strength above the 251,500 level, as a break above this would signal a potential shift in the bearish undertone.

MCX Crude Oil (8,421): Selling resume; Lower high pattern on the charts.

Crude oil gained on renewed US-Iran tensions and a sharp decline in US crude inventories.

MCX Crude Oil continues to maintain a negative bias, with daily momentum remaining weak and the 10 and 20 DEMA acting as immediate supply zones. The formation of a lower high on the daily chart further indicates fading bullish strength, while prices are hovering near a crucial support area. For today's session, support is placed at 8,680–8,750, while resistance is seen around 8,200–8,020. The outlook remains negative and will require a review only if the price sustains above the 9,150 mark.
