

Market View from the Technical Research Desk

Nifty (25815.55)

Nifty witnessed volatile intraday moves but managed to regain strength from the lower demand zone and closed marginally lower by 3 points at 25,815.55. Sectorally, selective buying was seen in IT stocks, while a few Midcap 50 counters showed relative strength. From a technical standpoint, as we approach the weekly close, 25,800 emerges as a crucial make-or-break level, coinciding with the 50-day SMA. Short-term averages (10/20 EMA) have started losing momentum. A decisive break below the 50-SMA could open the downside toward the 100-SMA near 25,350. Given this setup, the outlook remains extremely cautious at current levels. A close below 25,800 should be viewed as a signal to exit or reduce long positions. On the upside, a decisive close above 26,050 would bring bulls back into action. Immediate resistance is placed at 25,950–25,900, while support is seen at 25,700–25,600. The 25,950–25,700 range could be the possible trading range for the day.

Bank Nifty (58912.85)

Bank Nifty showed pockets of weakness and closed marginally lower by 13.90 points at 58,912.85. On the stock-specific front, the advance–decline ratio stood at 5:7, with Federal Bank and Axis Bank closing in the green, while PNB and HDFC Bank underperformed. Technically, the index has slipped below the 59,000 mark, indicating short-term weakness. The 50-day SMA at 58,410 acts as the next immediate support. On the daily chart, Bank Nifty appears to be forming a descending triangle pattern, and any break below the support could invite selling toward the 100-day SMA. Bank Nifty also seems to be heading for a negative crossover on the short-term 10 and 20 DEMA on the daily chart. A successful crossover would put additional pressure on the positive momentum. If Bank Nifty continues to trade below the 59,400 level, the immediate trend and momentum are likely to remain under pressure. Immediate support is placed at 58,800–58,400, while resistance is seen at 59,200. The 59,200–58,400 range could be the possible trading range for the day.
