With evolvement of equity markets over the decades, several products were introduced to provide passive investment opportunities to investors, such as index funds, ETFs, mutual funds, REITs, etc. However, ownership in such funds comes at the cost of maintenance and execution charges.

One well-thought approach of passive investment, which not only provides direct exposure to equity markets but also eliminates other operational costs, is through investment in holding companies listed on bourses.

Holding company investment acts as a great passive financial instrument, as company's financial performance is derived from the performance of several portfolio companies, thus diluting the company specific risk.

Looking at the historical price performance, holding companies have a proven track record of outperformance over the broader market indices. Comparison of Holding Co. index (constituting of coverage holding companies) with SENSEX over past 10 years is shown in the chart below.

This study shows that the Holding Co. index significantly outperformed the benchmark index over a longer investment horizon. Specifically, it was observed that the outperformance accelerates during the boom market, as was evidenced during the periods of 2017-18 and 2023-24 when the index nearly doubled within a span of one-year.

Although the corrections during market downturns were relatively sharp, as was seen during COVID times (2020), accelerated recoveries in subsequent periods provide the necessary cushion over longer investment horizons.

A detailed analysis on value creation by each holding company under coverage, compared to the benchmark index, is shown in the table below.

This study infers that, returns generated by the holding company over varied investment periods, outpaced those reported by the benchmark index. Thus, offering better risk reward opportunities for passive investment over longer horizons.

Holding Company StructureQ. What is a Holding Company? Why is it created?

Holding company is generally a parent company, limited liability company or limited partnership which holds a notable stake in portfolio companies. A holding company structure is developed when there exists multiple companies operating in different sectors under the umbrella of same group. It is usually owned by the promoter family and created to exhibit better control over the group companies.

There are multiple secondary factors such as tax planning, centralization of control, better allocation of capital employed, lower cost of debt financing, etc. being considered during the creation of a holdco. However, one of the key reason is the asset and liability protection as the parent company remains isolated even if the situation arises of any subsidiary company going bankrupt.

Q. What are the types of Holding company structures? Why there exists valuation gap between them?

Companies which are incorporated keeping in view, investment, as the sole purpose are generally referred to as Financial Holding Co., while those that operates independent business model in addition to holding considerable stake in subsidiary / associate companies are called Operational Holding Co. As a result, incorporating the value attached to core operational business, Operational Holding co. usually trades at a higher valuation as compared to Financial Holding Co.

Such valuation gap is also observed between domestic holdco. and overseas holdco. One of the key factors which can justify this gap is the high proportion of promoter shareholding in Indian holding companies which impairs the basic underlying assumption that the interest of the minority shareholders would be prioritized each time while making any key strategic decisions.

Q. What is Holding Co. discount and reasons behind its consideration?

Subsidiaries / portfolio companies operating under umbrella structure are normally assigned a holding company discount during calculation of individual intrinsic value. Some of the key reasons for application of this discount are as follows:

Lack of control: One of the key reason for holding companies to trade at discount compared to portfolio companies is the lack of control it has, in taking any strategic decision of the investee companies.

Volatility in income: As key source of income for a holding company is the interest / dividend income it earns from portfolio companies, thus it largely depends upon multiple factors such as performance of each investee company, respective dividend policy and any changes in it. As a result, hangover on account of risk that one or the other company may face adverse development / sectoral headwind is factored in using Holding Co. Discount.

Comparatively lower liquidity: As Holding company owns only a percentage of portfolio company and not the entire business, book size is resultantly lower than actual book size of the investee company. Additionally, promoter family of the underlying group owns significant proportion in the company leaving smaller pie for institutions and retail investors to trade or invest in.

Double Taxation: Holding company pay income tax on the income it receives as the dividend income. The investee company also pays the tax on the same income earned. Such situation exposes shareholders of Holdco. to double taxation situation.

Q. Why level of discount among Holding Co. basket varies?

Multiple holding companies are listed on Indian bourses falling under both Financial and Operational Holding categories. While this report is largely focusing on Financial holding companies, the valuation gap within this basket itself is very wide. It is clearly visible through the P/Bk valuation, as some companies' trade at low multiple e.g. Nalwa Sons Investment Co. trade at 0.17x TTM P/Bk while others enjoy significantly higher multiple such as TVS Holdings Co. garnering 5.4x TTM P/Bk. Multiple factors can be assigned to such valuation premium such as percentage shareholding in each investee company, corporate governance, performance of each underlying holding company, efficiency of capital allocation, etc.

Q. Which are the factors to drive Holding Co. rerating?

The factors which drives significant rerating, of holding companies, are listed below:

Rerating of Portfolio Company: Performance of Holdco. is largely driven by the performance in underlying companies. Sectoral tailwinds, govt. support or favorable policy announcements, corp. developments / restructuring, efficient capital employed, foray into new / lucrative business lines by investee companies could have varied range of impact and may lead Holdco rerating.

Primary market listing: Potential of several companies in the portfolio falling under unquoted segment/asset remains undervalued, as investment in these companies are carried at historical prices and not revised frequently. Thus, primary market listing of any such investment, provides the opportunity to value it appropriately and free of any significant discount. This, either increases book value or provides an opportunity to realize investing gains partially / fully.

Q. What are recent regulatory developments on Holding Co. value determination?

There have been couple of developments on Holding Co. being discussed at the regulator's end.

Voluntary De-listing: The regulator floated a consultation paper on voluntary delisting of holding companies. It suggested alternatives to reverse book building sources, delisting of IHCs, counter-offer framework, determining 'Floor Price' and review of reference date for floor price determination. However, SEBI did not approve the proposed delisting regulations.

Fair Value Determination: In the light of Investment Companies (ICs) and Investment Holding Companies (IHCs) are infrequently traded and at a price lower than the disclosed book value. As circuit breakers might affect fair price discovery, regulator may identify ICs and IHCs for call auction and may initiate the process for special call-auction without price band.

This report thus digs down into the universe of holding companies and gives brief investment hypothesis on some of the selected counters which possess the requisites of a rerating candidate in near future and provides an attractive opportunity of wealth creation with a calculative risk. Therefore, we recommend to Buy this Holding companies with a potential upside of more than 50% over next 2-3 years horizon.
